Chinamen

Chinamen is a one act play. It is a fast-paced farce concerning the dinner party from hell. It is a play for two people but between them they will be playing five characters! Their ages are somewhere between 30 – 50 but obviously must be compatible.

Because they are playing a variety of roles and on occasions a character will exit one side of the stage to reappear as a different character on the other side a certain amount of agility and dexterity will be needed! The differences between the characters will be emphasised with subtle changes of costumes and in the case of Jo becoming Alex, wigs.

The set will be relatively simple, three doors, stage left, right and centre stage and a window with curtains right back stage.

The characters are:-

Stephen – the husband. A bit dippy, forgetful and prone to panic. The actor playing Stephen will also play:-

Barney – who is a friend of the couple. Barney and his wife are separated and inadvertently Stephen has invited Barney to the same dinner party at which Barney's estranged wife and new boyfriend will be present.

Jo – the wife. More practicable than Stephen. She will play two additional parts:-

Bee – Stephen's estranged wife. Now going out with a man much younger than her and conscious that all their friends are talking about her. Prone to be tearful and drinks a lot.

Alex – the boyfriend. Younger than Bee. Hippy type (think Jonny Depp).

Playing dates 15th and 16th February 2019 as part of the Theatre Supper Evenings at Woodford Community Centre. SK7 1PS

Sat Love

This is a one act play, running time approximately 35 minutes, for two actors, one male and one female. Set costume and props are minimal and much use will be made of lighting and sound effects.

“He” is a middle-aged man, he is affluent, successful, conceited and self-opinionated. He is “happily married” to Ginnie (not seen) and is carrying on an affair with Laura (also not seen). He is very proud of his new sat nav which he needs for a business trip to Ripon but he is unaware that this sat nav will be his nemesis.

“She” is the sat nav, initially a disembodied voice but as the play progresses, she gradually becomes more defined and visible until eventually she is revealed as a “real person”. “She” is not age specific.

“She” is a sat nav with a difference, she has a female silicon chip, a conscience and a set of moral values, she is all woman and a feminist to boot! Moreover, she is able to use a mobile phone and is able apparently to operate independently of her on/off switch.

“She” is very disapproving of “his” affair and does all she can to divert his car from Laura’s address and back to his own home where his wife awaits him. Her moral values and seemingly independent abilities contrive to make life very difficult for “him” with disastrous results and a nice and unexpected twist at the end.
